Objectives

The objective of the research internship program is to provide the participants with valuable professional experience related to their research, as well as an opportunity for professional development and, in selected cases, a platform for the publication of their work. The research internship program is primarily advertised to university students enrolled in programs in International Relations, Law, Economics, Philology, History, Political Science, Security or Area/Country Studies. Interns will be granted access to the research infrastructure of the Institute, including its library.

Eligibility

The program is open to:

- Undergraduate (BA/BSc) students, who completed at least 4 semesters of studies,
- Graduate (MA/MSc) students,
- PhD students, and
- recent graduates of undergraduate and graduate programs not currently enrolled in an institution of higher education.

who are interested in pursuing research in the area of International Relations.

High-level command of English is expected; skills in other languages, corresponding to the volunteer's field of interest, are appreciated.

Tasks

Research interns contribute to the work of the Institute at least twice a week (16 hours) on the premises of IFAT (H-1016 Budapest, Bérc u. 13-15.), including the attendance of mandatory seminars on Friday mornings. Certain tasks might require work outside IFAT premises.

Research interns are encouraged to incorporate the skills and knowledge gained during their stay at IFAT into their own research, and will be expected to submit a 20,000-character analysis paper no later than 4 weeks after the end of the program. On meeting required standards of quality, the papers can be published as part of the KKI Policy Briefs / KKI-Elemzések series (in English or in Hungarian). Interns will be supervised by the deputy director for research of IFAT, and will work under the professional guidance of a research fellow of the Institute, corresponding to their professional interests. The fellow designated for mentoring will provide regular feedback on the intern's work.

On request, research interns also:

- contribute to the activities of the fellows of the Institute with research related tasks, e.g. data mining and analysis, research of scientific literature, project work, media watch and news analysis for the weekly bulletin of the Institute, and
- participate in the events held at IFAT, write memos and news articles of these events, and participate in the reception of delegations visiting the Institute.

The internship starts on March 4, 2019, and concludes on May 26, 2019, with a possibility of prolongation on an individual basis. Midway through the program, a positive assessment on the quality of the volunteer's work by the assigned mentor will be required for further participation.

Research interns are not eligible for financial compensation, scholarship or salary for their work. The successful completion of the program will be recognized by the issuing of an official certificate by the Institute for Foreign Affairs and Trade.
